This is one of more than 100 drug smuggling cases by the Justice Department since the start of 2010. Typically, marijuana can be grown in a field or an indoor room. However, scientists are working to grow the crop without the use of seeds, which could be harvested after three to four weeks. At this time, marijuana plants are generally about four feet tall and have four to eight leaves. In Colorado, residents could easily get pot legally through the Internet. "I think all of us have an inherent curiosity about other drugs," said Bob Randall, the deputy director of the Colorado Department of Public Health and Environment. "There's no rational reason to be curious or even interested." These days, users can buy marijuana from a plethora of sources. "It's kind of a matter of personal preference. I'm personally not a huge fan of pot, but it's legal, so I give in and I can do whatever I want," said Brian Emerick, a volunteer at Smart Students Colorado, a cannabis education center in Denver. "I just like to go when it's easy, because it makes me not work." Not only are millions of users turning to the Internet, but there's also been an increase in the number of grow operations popping up in residential areas. Eric Neff grew up in the suburbs of Denver. As a teen, he planned on being a doctor, but his life took an unexpected turn in the form of marijuana.
